“The institute provided me with the necessary time, tools and inspiration to reflect and evolve not only as a writer, but also as a teacher of writing.”

– Nhu Do, secondary teacher, EMWP Invitational Institute

What is the Writing Institute?

The Eastern Michigan Writing Project (EMWP), Monroe Summer Writing Institute is an intensive three-week session designed for teachers and administrators (K–College) concerned with the teaching of writing in any subject area and interested in professional growth opportunities. We seek educators who are committed to the teaching of writing and who wish to deepen their understanding of this subject and are looking for professional development or credits toward recertification. We encourage teachers from all disciplines and grade levels to apply.

What will I do?

- Write for personal and professional audiences
- Investigate questions about the teaching of writing
- Demonstrate your best practices in the teaching of writing
- Meet new colleagues, celebrate teaching, eat heartily

What will I gain by participating?

- Three graduate credits
- A new vision for the teaching of writing
- The opportunity to participate in a vibrant learning community
- Innovative ideas to use in your classroom
- Confidence in yourself as a writer and as a teacher of writing

Hear from previous participants of the Eastern Michigan Writing Project Invitational Institute:

“I have never grown so much as a writer. The Summer Institute is worth the sacrifice of time.” – Debbie Young, third grade teacher

“There are at least six different lessons each day that I can adapt to my classroom. The experience continuously provides new teaching ideas.”

– Susan Lake, third grade teacher.

“The SI is about talking, reading, writing and something I would have never experienced... sharing!” – Alli Kaplan, secondary teacher
